Monday

I come in liesure to this place, hoping to produce something creative, as if my mind will churn out words and patterns that weren't tried before. This is how hopeful I am about writing - this ability of producing sentences that shall seem coherent and convey sense yet with a touch of abstractness laid in the midst of everything.

It is convenient for me to write down a journal entry every now and then, now that it's being handwritten and later digitalized, it feels special. The contents of what I write about shall always be vague, it is a reflection of my state of mind. There is no need for me to remain committed to what I ought to produce - it will be more than what I'd possibly imagine - with the abundance of paper, ink and time, I shall not inhibit myself in putting down words on paper. I still wonder if time is still the luxury I have, it seems like it will never be enough.

As far as today is concerned, it was just another day of me trying to look busy but trying to kill time in disguise, as if waiting for some external event to take place that might benefit me.

The coffee that I got before writing this down has turn cold and it tastes bad. I will have to warm it up again - the chilly temperature makes it cool down quicker - barely lasting minute.

I got my Playstation 4 gaming console back today along with some books I wanted to read - I just kept watching videos on YouTube on PS4 the whole afternoon after having the lunch here at Welwork.

The only good reason to show up here happens to be the lunch that is affordable and decent enough to fill my belly. When I get back to Anra corporate suites I shall have dinner - the big tasty dinner - I feel blessed to be able to enjoy such good things despite the pain and misery that otherwise surround.

It is good to have a place to stay, food to eat, clothes to wear and relax doing nothing whenever possible. All of this costs money, luckily I had enough to spend it now. It would be difficult to continue, if I run out of it - I only wish my parents would take me back in, if I do not have money.

I have anchored myself in a certain mindset regarding work and show no intention to change - it is as if nothing matters anymore - everything shall perish and wane away anyway - why try? is always the question that beckons me - Why not let it all fall down and break apart and scatter and rot?

My body still hurts after so many days of fever - it feels so painful at times especially the lower back, shoulder, joints etc. It compels me to a manage that I cannot afford. I have sexual desires that keep coming up every now and then, I do not wish to lose any more money or time on more. I still am unable to recollect that big spend that is due - maybe it will hit me one way or another sometime or later. Why do I not have this 'shraddha' or devotion towards software development work that I do? What will it take to make me do something worthwhile there? Why do I not treat myself with love and compassion, that could encourage me to pursue this craft further? Why do I not motivate myself, encourage myself and console myself enough to keep this craft ongoing? I believe that I can be more compassionate towards myself and be kind with the failures I endure. I can be kind towards myself in recognizing these unabilities, inadequacies, redundancies, laziness and so on.
