I forgot to book this place before coming here. I wish I had done this before walking here all the way in a hurry. Now all that remains is for me to sit here and not do anything at all. What a waste to simply sit and scribble words the entire day. I spend it all to be of no practical use - there's almost no device on me. A rendition of morose proportions is what I yearn for - an utmost absurdity that no one could perhaps imagine. All this way about in practically doing nothing. I run away from all these towards purposeless morbid, grim, bleak apathy. Why do I care about nothing so much? As if I am a nihilist. An ongoing battle for unknown reasons or waypoints, I shall smear absurdity all over me before I drench myself with excruciating pain, negligence and injustice. I have not learnt to endure myself so far. I look into the eyes of other people as if I they have something that I don't already have. All these cravings for what good, I'm not sure. All these busy people around me trying to earn a buck with the work they do and I behave like a nobody, a jobless, worthless, pointless, nothing. Isn't it all this absurd need to be validated, to be treated with respect, to be treated with empathy, love, care and what not drives me ~~into~~ with my insane expectations of everyone around me. Why should anyone give a rat's ass about who the fuck am I? Why this pathetic craving from all the people around me? or anyone far far away. I have to learn to be a boring, unwanted, absurd, nobody. I should avoid all forms of stupidity, interaction with people.

One should learn to desecrate better. I suppose for one should learn it, it can't come from birth. It has to be learnt through some boring way and takes years to make few strides. I am just worried that someone might check out these writings of mine and then keep it at the mantle of stupidity. Why is there a trouble with being the way, the way things are? If Cioran wrote a book to postpone his suicide, I have no nicks him at all. I am not desperate enough to kill myself or optimistic enough that death would solve my suffering. Death is a big mystery, I don't know what comes in it or after it. So the exercise of writing will keep me ^{from} killing myself is unknown. Why keep writing? What is there to write at all? When the thoughts that flow in my head ~~are~~ are not my own. The every morsel of my being is a deplorable repetition of all that there - what more should I become creative about? Why should I create anything when there's nothing left to create? Even my handwriting gives up after few sentences, as ~~all~~ all of these are forcefully done, out of a punishment that is imposed on me - to write, to make sense, to fill papers with ink strokes that would entertain someone (which includes myself). I am sure I too would be despised to see what I have written.

Hi Girish,

Perhaps when you would be reading this letter you would still be unhappy, unfulfilled, bored, suffering with pain and turmoil through the enormous despair that cannot be gotten rid of. This despair forever will be with you - you'll struggle to endure yourself amidst all the chaos that's out there. You'll struggle to fulfil your basic desires of food, shelter, clothing etc, let alone your luxurious ones. You'll go into further debt to all those people whom you live as a parasite with. Your idea of independence and freedom from cramps shall never be fulfilled. You'll live in disharmony, anguish and perpetual mediocrity. Enjoy your mediocrity, it might just as well be the only thing you'd ever be capable of. Let go of these hobbies of reading books, finishing them, summarising and so on - that'll never happen - you'll always give up sooner than you think. You'll never earn money again through any of your vocations as nobody cares for it anymore. The best you could probably do is just sit here and inside that room and do nothing. Sit day in and day out breathing, drinking water and occasional food to keep yourself alive until you die. Consider you were a caged animal which is regularly fed, cleaned and kept alive until old age kills you.

This is the sort of living that you should probably get used to. Your desperation to write and post these letters shall not be fulfilled as you are broke - you don't have the nickels to buy even the stamps to post these letters to your home.

Are you even going to try to find yourself a high paying, sustainable work at all? Or are you going to continue to be humiliated every day from every nobody around you?

Time will eventually triumph against every plan you have or try to enact. This is the way it is. Just don't punish yourself too much, the world will do that on your behalf. It will not spare you.

Ok, that's all there is for me to say at this point. You would go to every extent to keep on rambling and I cannot encourage you to do that. Instead, how about you keep your mouth shut, and just disappear into nothingness, an absolute yet perpetual abyss.

Wednesday.

let alone read it or share it with others.

The coffee or the tea that I made has ~~not~~ cooled down now. It has become undrinkable. The beverage cools down quicker in here because of the air conditioning. Maybe, if I had more ways to kill time apart from waiting for that tea to lose its warmth.

I watched that cricket test game until yesterday night, in the hope for entertainment but I was disappointed as it all fell apart.

The only way to keep myself excited happens to masturbation and it is hurtful to my penis. I cannot take that pain any longer. Then I stream the contents of laptop: videos, pictures and music on to the PS3 through media server and get myself entertained through some twenty year old music videos.

I play football game on the console with so much interest as if it was going to fetch me some money.

They write as if they exist, I write as if I do it has a way to kill time and eventually life itself. What's left of me is nothing and these empty words that simply flow out of an insane compulsion. In a world where people ~~do~~ live with goals, aspirations, purpose and what not, how would I even make sense? All that absurd nonsense about my writings still need to vent away through nowhere. How can I not simply disappear from this age old, mundane, existence? Is there a thought at all to begin with when everything that's out there is already poured into me as a form of conditioned thought, which perpetuates itself through a boring nonsense. All those preoccupied things when there's nothing that possible could matter. Not sure how long am I going to continue writing this way as I would be hungry in sometime and would have to run back to Momma's place for food.

The hesitance to create a purpose is a real one and it probably manifests itself in me more prominently than it would. I prefer to live in chaos and keep complaining about it. I constantly complain, there's enough to complain about, starting from my birth itself. I could complain all day about the absurdity that's there - say that god is a scam and keep yapping it in my writings for ever.
